Green Deposits

❖ Context

- Recently, the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) came up with a regulatory framework for banks to accept green deposits from customers.

❖ What are Green Deposits?

- Green deposits are not very different from the regular deposits that banks accept from their customers.
- The only major difference is that banks promise to earmark the money that they receive as green deposits towards environment-friendly projects.
- For example, a bank may promise that green deposits will be used towards financing renewable energy projects that fight climate change.
- A green deposit is just one product in a wide array of other financial products such as green bonds that help investors put money into environmentally sustainable projects.

❖ RBI's Regulatory Framework:

- The RBI framework requires banks to disclose information on how they invest green deposits, including details on allocation to different green projects and the environmental impact of such investments.
- Banks must develop approved rules or policies for investing green deposits, which need to be made public on their websites.
- Third-party verification of the banks' investment claims and the sustainability credentials of green projects is mandatory.
- The RBI has provided a list of eligible sectors for green deposits, including renewable energy, waste management, clean transportation, energy efficiency, and afforestation.
- Green deposits cannot be invested in projects involving fossil fuels, nuclear power, tobacco, etc., to prevent greenwashing.
- The aim of the new rules is to ensure transparency and prevent misleading claims about the environmental impact of green deposits.
